Sibley vs. the State of Connecticut. This case is a claim for compensation for the complainant on account of the death of her husband. Sheriff Preston B. Sibley, as the result of an accident that occurred while he was engaged in the discharge of the duties of his office. The brief contains an interesting discussion of various phases of the cases as so far developed, especially in relation to the question of the sheriff having been an employe of the state under the terms of the compensation act and as to whether he was a state or county officer. Excerpts a state or county officer. Excerpts from the brief follow:

The sheriff as a state officer—The term "state officer" as here used should not be confounded with like words as they appear in the opinion of the courts in discussing the question courts in discussing the question whether a person for certain purposes is an officer or an employe, the definite limits of the county, con-cern the state at large and to him is delegated the exercise of a portion of the sovereign power of the state, Upon the question of whether t sheriff's position is a state position, the opinion of the governor of Khode Island by the supreme court justices of that state in the Newport police commission matter is quoted, that opinion setting up "the distinction recognized in all of them is between officers whose duties are wholly of a local nature and officers appointed for a particular locality but yet whose duparticular locality, but yet whose duties are of a general or public nature. When they are of the latter character, they are state officers, whether the legislature itself makes the appointment or delegates its authority to the municipality." municipality.

Passing on to the next question, which is, "Is the state of Connecticut an employer in the case under consideration?" no one need go further than the the definition of employer in the work-men's compensation law of Connecti-cut, section 43, where, eliminating ircut, section 43, where, eliminating irrelevant material for the purpose of this case, it defines "employer" as follows: "Employer shall mean—the state and any public corporation within the and any public corporation within the state using the services of another for pay." Now it cannot be denied that the state of Connecticut used the services of its sheriff for pay and it comes wholly and entirely within the definition of employer in said section Employe Defined.

"Employe" is likewise defined in the workmen's compensation act as follows: "Employe shall mean any per-son who has entered into or works under any contract of service or apprenticeship with an employer."

"A Person Under Any Contract." It will be argued by opposing interests that a sheriff is not under conests that a sheriff is not under contract with his employer, and numerous cases doubtless will be cited to sustain that position, but these decisions are not illuminating upon the subject under consideration, for they are rendered in connection with cases of the town in charge of other than workman's companions of the connection with cases. other than workmen's compensation Fire Chief Joseph Duchesneau, Englcases. It will be observed that the definition in the Connecticut compensation act is a person under any con-

The definitions of an employer and of an employe must be read together and harmonize. An employer presupposes an employe and vice versa. It is absurd to assume that a man is acting in the role of employer and yet has no one whom be employer. yet has no one whom he employs. Un-der the definition of "employer" as used in the act, if the state used the services of Sheriff Sibley for pay it was his employer and the sheriff its employe; consequently a person whose services are being used for pay must necessarily be working under a con-tract of service within the definition of employe. Any other definition would render the last definition an absurd-

Intent of Compensation Act. The intent and spirit of the Connecticut Workmen's Compensation is to provide aid, during disability, the injured and assistance for the de pendents in case of death. The in-jured employe who happens to have his employment through a quasi-con-tract in connection with a public of-fice needs the compensation just as much as the injured employe who has his contract apart from a public office and the same is true of the dependents
